Broad paradigms about justice generally, or about what "the problem is", shape how people have come to think about what climate justice is and what it requires. What paradigms offer potential improvements for achieving justice in the context of climate change? What would this look like and how do we get there?	Lead: Steffen Bauer and Aarti Gupta Facilitator: Clara Brandi
12.30-13.30	Lunchtime networking session	Buffet lunch at DIE foyer

13.30-14.30	Bundle B: Equity under the UNFCCC and in global institutions This session focuses on the challenge of structuring institutions capable of facilitating justice while addressing climate policy needs. The briefs included to kick-start this session include focus on design proposals, critiques or considerations of specific institutions within and beyond the UNFCCC.	Bundle C: Local justice and equitable adaptation Many key issues of justice occur at the local level, either within adaptation responses or within locally based land-use or mitigation policies. In this session we focus explicitly on the intersection of justice with climate policies at the local level.	Lead B: Patricia Ferreira, Heike Schroeder Facilitator B: Sonja Klinsky Lead C: Tim Forsyth, Jessica Omukuti Facilitator C: J-. Timmons Roberts

14.45-15.45	Bundle D: Equity in transformational change In this session, we will discuss the justice issues that emerge specifically when considering decarbonization pathways and mitigation policies. This includes questions of just transition, technical and ethical challenges of particular pathways, and questions about how to 'build in' justice when designing or implementing mitigation policies.	Bundle E: Social and cultural responses to climate justice The politics of justice, as well as broader social and cultural ideas and claims about justice have become central in developing effective and just climate policies and institutions, and in contributing to broader processes of social change. This session will examine existing knowledge and frameworks for understanding how such processes work in the climate context to either promote or impede justice concerns.	Lead D: Kirsten Jenkins, Narasimha Rao Facilitator D: Clara Brandi Lead E: Marco Grasso, Mathieu Munsch Facilitator E: Steffen Bauer
